Reflections from the U.S./Mexico Border
A group of 7 parishioners spent a week (October 6-12) on the Border to better understand the realities of migration from Mexico into the United States. You are invited to hear their stories and experiences during the weeks ahead.

Humanitarian Aid on the US/Mexico Border

Our initial experience of the borderlands came through Leesa Jacobson in the small town of Arivaca, Arizona. Leesa is a member of People Helping People, an all-volunteer organization whose goal is the protection of human life, regardless of immigration status. Along with several other groups, they maintain water stations and search for human remains in the desert. Most startling was a map she shared of southern Arizona covered with red dots representing migrant deaths. (humaneborders.org/migrant-death-mapping)

Migrants are desperate to find work to feed their families or to escape death threats in their homelands. They walk through desolate lands of record-breaking heat and bone chilling nights. Some are caught, some evade the border patrols, but thousands die from lack of water or exposure to the elements.

Do their lives matter?
To me they do.

- George Waldref
